2. Poem by Kenn Nesbitt

One morning in my bedroom I was startled by a snake, so I picked him up and took him out and threw him in the lake.

He returned a minute later, meaning, no, he didn't drown, so I put him on my bicycle and rode him out of town.

It was hardly half an hour till he turned up in my room, so I packed him in a parcel and I shipped him to Khartoum.

When I found him back again on the succeeding afternoon I went looking for a way that I could blast him to the moon.

When I couldn't find a rocket it was then I knew that, dang, a snake is yours forever once he eats your boomerang.
